

Exploring Private URL Leaks And Ongoing Abuse of Government Web Services

Vin01: <https://github.com/vin01>

Case 1 - URL Leaks via Security Tools

Popular malware/URL analysis tools like urlscan.io, Hybrid Analysis, and Cloudflare Radar URL Scanner store vast amounts of links for intelligence gathering.

However, it's less known that these services also store a significant number of private and sensitive links due to:

- Sensitive links mistakenly submitted by users unaware of public exposure.
- Misconfigured scanners and extensions submitting private links from emails as public data.

Types of Exposed Sensitive Links

Cloud Storage Files

Files shared via Dropbox, iCloud, Sync, Egnyte, Ionos Hidrive, AWS S3, and NAS tools like Western Digital Mycloud.

Corporate Communications

Links from Slido,, Zoom, OneDrive, and Airtable, often containing internal discussions or documents.

Authentication Links

Password reset links and OAuth sign-in links, which can grant unauthorized access.

These services are widely used, and their single private links with random identifiers can grant access. Some are password-protected, but many are not, leading to data exposure.

Real-World Examples of Leaked Data

Screenshots from urlscan.io and Hybrid Analysis show various sensitive content:

Many submissions originated from automated tools like falconsandbox.

Who is Responsible?

"Hybrid Analysis analyses, publishes, and shares Submitted Content from users... and is not responsible for the content or information which may incidentally appear..."

- Hybrid Analysis Terms and Conditions

"You specifically acknowledge that urlscan shall not be liable for any user content or conduct. You are responsible for all content posted and activity that occurs under your account."

- urlscan.io Terms

There's no clear mechanism to review or remove sensitive links automatically.

Who is Responsible?

Threat Hunters and Unlisted Scans

urlscan Pro allows paid users access to "Unlisted" scans, which are not public but visible to vetted security researchers and reputable corporations.

An example is Cortex-Analyzers from TheHive, which explicitly uses `public: on` for urlscan.io scans, making links appear as `unlisted` even if an account's visibility is set to Private.

This exposes sensitive information to urlscan Pro users. As of a recent 24-hour period, urlscan.io had:

- 398,563 Public scans
- 328,147 Unlisted scans
- 955,432 Private scans

Canary tokens confirmed unlisted/API submitted links were accessed multiple times within an hour.

Case 2 – How are cyber criminals earning an easy living in 2025

Government web domains, university web infrastructure and small businesses provide free content hosting for malicious actors.

Exploitation Paths:

- Outdated CMS/plugins (e.g., WordPress, Drupal)
- Subdomain takeovers via dangling DNS records
- Cache poisoning through “search my site” features
- Credential stuffing due to weak auth controls
- Insecure forms used for content submission requests

In effect: Foundational neglect + common vulnerabilities = large attack surface for even low-effort attackers.

Exploiting Government Domains

Government departments, despite their critical role, often have vulnerable cybersecurity postures. This makes them unwitting hosts for illicit content.

Universities & Schools: Unexpected Hosts

Universities and schools, with numerous web-facing services, can also be exploited. Despite teaching cybersecurity, their systems may not be fully secure.

Enterprise Security Tools: A False Sense of Safety?

Surprisingly, many enterprise security tools, including antivirus and VPNs, fail to flag these malicious links as unsafe.

Trusted by Security Tools

Norton, Kaspersky, Zscaler, F-secure, NordVPN, Virustotal, and Palo Alto all marked these links as safe.

SOAR Tools Also Fail

Even SOAR tools like URLscan did not flag these links.

The collage consists of several overlapping screenshots:

All good!

Pre-Approved Domains: Still Vulnerable

Even restricting access to a pre-approved list of domains doesn't guarantee safety. Attackers exploit trusted domains like Google's Looker Studio.

The Motivation: Affiliate Networks & Phishing

These files are often not malware but lead users through a chain of websites, generating small amounts of money via affiliate networks. Some links are also phishing attempts, targeting children seeking "Robux."

Final Thoughts & References

Ongoing abuse of these trusted domains is widespread globally and shows a clear lack of secure development practices. Once reported, the responsible departments take the content down but a lack of transparency exists in these closed ecosystems and does not encourage open research.
